Introduction

The WJEC Eduqas linear A level in modern foreign languages (French/German/Spanish) qualification, accredited by Ofqual for first teaching from September 2016, is available to all schools and colleges in England.

The A level will be awarded for the first time in Summer 2018, using grades A*–E.

The WJEC Eduqas A level qualification in a modern foreign language (French, German, Spanish) provides an engaging and exciting opportunity for learners to build on their previous study of modern foreign languages. Through social, intellectual, historical, political and cultural themes, learners will be able to develop their linguistic knowledge and cultural understanding of the countries/communities where the language of study is spoken. An opportunity to study literature and film will allow learners to undertake a deeper analysis of language structures and increase their cultural awareness as part of an integrated approach to language learning. A strong focus is placed on building learners' confidence and fluency in spoken language using relevant and topical themes. The requirement to research an area of personal interest related to the countries/communities where the language of study is spoken will enhance learners' cultural appreciation and enable them to gain a greater awareness of intercultural differences.

The specification is intended to promote a variety of styles of teaching and learning so that the course is enjoyable for all participants. The content has been developed to allow learners to further develop skills in the language of study and to encourage a deeper appreciation and understanding of the cultural and historic elements of the countries and communities where the language of study is spoken.

Additional ways that WJEC can offer support:

- Specimen assessment materials
- Face-to-face CPD events
- Examiners' reports on each question paper
- Free access to past question papers and mark schemes via the secure website
- Direct access to the subject officer
- Free online resources
- Exam Results Analysis
- Online Examination Review

Context

This specification has been developed so that the study of a modern foreign language offers the same intellectual advantages as other humanities subjects.

In addition to high level practical language skills, the content of A level in a modern foreign language provides depth of knowledge, understanding and cultural awareness. It also fosters a range of transferable skills such as communication, critical thinking, autonomy, resourcefulness and creativity as well as linguistic, cultural and cognitive flexibility. All of these skills are of value to the individual, to wider society, to higher education and to employers.

The content for A level in a modern foreign language has been designed to be of relevance to learners of all disciplines, whether they intend to progress to further study in the subject or not. This specification provides a robust foundation for those intending to study a modern foreign language to degree level or equivalent.

Aims and objectives

When delivering the course, teachers must ensure that learners:

- have the opportunity to enhance their linguistic skills and promote and develop their capacity for critical thinking on the basis of their knowledge and understanding of the language, culture and society of the country or countries where the language is spoken

- are able to develop control of the language system to convey meaning, using spoken and written skills, including an extended range of vocabulary, for both practical and intellectual purposes as increasingly confident, accurate and independent users of the language

- develop their ability to interact effectively with users of the language in speech and in writing, including through online media

- develop language learning skills and strategies, including communication strategies to sustain communication and build fluency and confidence

- are able to engage critically with intellectually stimulating texts, films and other materials in the original language, developing an appreciation of sophisticated and creative uses of the language and understanding them within their cultural and social context

- develop knowledge about matters central to the society and culture, past and present, of the country or countries where the language is spoken

- develop their capacity for critical and analytical thinking through the language of study
• develop as independent researchers through the language of study.

Teachers must ensure that they address all the Context, Aims and Objectives and Content requirements across every theme and sub-theme as set down in the DfE GCE Subject Content for modern foreign languages.

You can read the full Department for Education subject level content for Modern Foreign Languages by going to:

The themes at A level will be covered in each exam series – therefore it is advised that teachers allocate equal teaching time to all the themes and sub-themes.

2. Delivering the specification

2.1 Approaches to teaching the themes and sub-themes

When looking at themes and sub-themes we should bear in mind that they are a vehicle for language teaching and learning and that the main emphasis of the language lessons should not be “teaching the themes and sub-themes” but teaching the language of study.

In order to improve the linguistic competence of the learners, lessons pertaining to themes and sub-themes should be conducted in the language of study and therefore all resources should be in the language of study as well. There is no specified factual content learners must acquire, however they will need to engage with a range of appropriate information and opinion in order to develop an awareness of the culture and history where the language of study is spoken. An effective way to achieve that would be for learners to listen to foreign language news and programmes on a regular basis. Some TV channels provide news edited for young people, using less complex language, ideal for learners. Email exchanges with partner schools or private correspondence with penfriends will also be very beneficial.

The specification comprises two areas of interest:

1) Social issues and trends and
2) Political, intellectual and artistic culture

The first theme in the Social issues and trends area of interest is “being a young person in French/German/Spanish-society”. This theme should appeal to learners who will be able to compare and contrast their own lives and attitudes to those of a young person in a country/community of the language of study, which will obviously enrich their lives. There is also some overlap with the topics of the previous specification so that teachers will be able to draw from some resources they have used previously.

The second theme in the Social issues and trends area of interest is “diversity and difference”. This theme encompasses migration and integration, cultural identity and marginalisation, cultural enrichment and celebrating difference, and discrimination and diversity. It provides an opportunity to explore, analyse and discuss these issues within the context of the countries/communities of the language of study. Learners can explore and discuss to what extent diverse cultural influences in the countries/communities of the language of study have a positive influence on mainstream culture. When approaching this theme, learners might like to put together a list of the cultural influences appropriate to the countries/communities being studied. Learners could analyse to what extent these groups are integrated into mainstream society, identifying to what extent there is conflict between different cultural groups and how this is being overcome. In addition, the sub-theme of discrimination and diversity provides an opportunity for learners to consider gender and equality issues of all kinds in the countries/communities of the language of study.

There are two themes in the Political, intellectual and artistic culture area of interest. The first theme is "Understanding the French/German/Spanish-speaking world". As the title indicates, it is important to bear in mind that all three languages are spoken in more than one country and that texts in each language exam could be drawn from publications from more than one country. The sub-theme relating to media, art, music and film in the countries/communities of the language of study does not require learners to acquire a comprehensive knowledge of these items, but rather a general cultural awareness. The study of a film and/or literary work(s) during the course will enable learners to gain valuable insight into film and literary analysis and the associated language.

The second theme in the Political, intellectual and artistic culture area of interest for each of the three languages considers one of the most formative historical periods in France, Germany or Spain during the last one hundred years. Learners, with the guidance of the teacher are encouraged to explore, build upon knowledge, and develop understanding and cultural appreciation of this period of the country’s development. The sub-themes provide guidance for study within the theme, however there is no specified content, as questions based on these sub-themes will be self-contained, that is to say questions will be set based on the given listening or reading texts only.

All texts for listening, reading and speaking activities in the examination relate to the countries or communities where the language of study is spoken, therefore the same should apply to texts used in the classroom. In this way learners will be immersed in the language and culture of the language of study at all times and will gradually develop their understanding of the cultural background.
2.2 Question types in the new specification

1. Translation into English and translation into French/German/Spanish.
2. Essay questions on a film and/or literary work(s).
3. Comprehension exercises (listening and understanding and reading and understanding):
   - There are a variety of question forms and exercises that will be used to elicit responses from material in both written and spoken French/German/Spanish.
   - Listening to or reading an extract. The extracts will be taken from a range of sources e.g. journalistic material, news reports, podcasts, blogs, reviews, conversations, dialogue, interviews, literary texts.
   - Questions will be designed to ensure that all the Assessment Objectives are covered appropriately.

The assessment objectives and weightings as they appear in the French/German/Spanish specification are given here for convenience:

AO1
Understand and respond:
   - in speech to spoken language including face-to-face interaction
   - in writing to spoken language drawn from a variety of sources

AO2
Understand and respond:
   - in speech to written language drawn from a variety of sources
   - in writing to written language drawn from a variety of sources.

AO3
Manipulate the language accurately, in spoken and written forms, using a range of lexis and structure.

AO4
Show knowledge and understanding of, and respond critically and analytically to, different aspects of the culture and society of countries/communities where the language is spoken.

The table below shows the weighting of each assessment objective for each component and for the qualification as a whole:

Examples of questions that can be set

Question types may include true/false statements, multiple choice, gap-fill, questions and answers, summary/assimilation style question and comprehension questions in French/German/Spanish:

- Multiple choice answers.
- Matching the correct two halves of a sentence. A list of incomplete sentences (List A) to be completed from List B. The pairings must be matched grammatically and accurately. There will be more sentences given in List B so candidates will need to select carefully.
- True/false statements where the candidate is required to indicate the true statements and correct any false statements.
- Writing a short summary in either French/German/Spanish or English. Bullet points will indicate the main areas of focus for the task completion.
- Filling a gap in a sentence with a choice of 3 alternatives given.
- Answering questions in French/German/Spanish: learners can use vocabulary from the text but must not copy or transcribe a whole sentence verbatim. Learners must manipulate the language in order to answer the questions set. For example:
  - A text may be in the 1st person and the question set to elicit a response in the 3rd person.
  - Give an answer using a noun instead of a verb.
  - Use a finite verb instead of an infinitive.
- Writing a synonym in French/German/Spanish for a word or short phrase given in a text.
- Longer gap-fill (reading). A passage of text with words blanked out and a list of words appended. Learners have to choose the correct word for each gap. Not all the words will be needed. The answer must be correct grammatically and copied correctly including accent.

2.3 Approaches to Translation

40% of the marks in Component 2 at A level are allocated to the translation tasks; 20 marks for translation into English and 20 marks for translation into French/German/Spanish. It is important therefore to ensure that adequate time is spent by learners on developing translation skills in lessons as well as at home.

Translating a text is a complex task requiring a mastery of vocabulary, grammar, syntax and idiomatic expressions. Grammar and translation go together hand in hand and the teaching of a point of grammar can be incorporated easily into a translation task. Translating individual sentences related to a grammar point is a fun way of introducing learners to translation.

With teacher guidance, learners can explore the similarities and differences between their mother tongue and the language of study. Learners can consider the meaning behind a text in English to help develop an appreciation of how to go about translating it into the language of study. An understanding of the complexity of their mother tongue will help learners when they translate into the language of study and an awareness of different writing styles in English will help learners to develop their translation skills.

Learners often understand the ideas conveyed in a foreign language passage, but their attempt at translating into their own language is not always successful. If they do not understand their own translation into English, then no one else will! The following questions can help the learner to avoid translation pitfalls:

- Have I applied the conventions of the word order common in my mother tongue?
- Have I avoided the traps of ‘false friends’?
- Does the sentence I produced read like an English sentence, in other words is it idiomatic?
- Have I used correct tenses / direct and indirect articles etc.?

Working together in pairs or groups, learners can spot inadequacies in their translation by reading aloud or asking fellow learners who have not seen the original text whether they understand the translation. Learners enjoy working on improving translations together. Learners can write a draft version individually or together and work on it until they are happy with the final version. Learners can then go away and produce individual work with more confidence.

Experience of translation at GCSE will form a good basis for learners continuing to AS. Learners can also be encouraged to develop their dictionary skills through fun class based activities. Learners working in pairs or in small groups on translation tasks in class is a good way to help them rise to the challenges of translation.

Teaching approaches:

Below are some suggestions to help teachers develop translation skills in their learners:

- Use online translation software to highlight problems with translations
- Learners can rewrite inadequate translations made using software
- Compare learners’ translations to an established translation
- Let learners work on translations together
- Individual translations could be compared and contrasted
- Learners could bring in a text in their mother tongue and explain in the language of study why they like it. A translation could be attempted after that
- Sentences translated into the language of study by one group of learners could be translated back into the mother tongue by another group
- Each learner could be encouraged to bring in two sentences each week which relate to a specific grammatical point. Sentences could be collected in a bank and be used frequently for practice runs.
2.4 Approaches to teaching literature

There are many ways to approach the teaching of literature, but for those who are new to it or perhaps want to refresh their skills, here are some suggestions given below:

a) If new to choosing a text these pointers for consideration may help:
   • length
   • level of linguistic difficulty
   • relevance and link with themes
   • how the work will appeal to learners

b) Approaches to reading the text:
   • take a short extract - teacher translates, learners follow original text and discuss. Grammatical analysis and explanation can also be integrated into the task.
   • learners follow original text and discussion to elicit themes, ideas, reactions
   • learners read chapters in advance of class with vocabulary support in readiness for discussion in class

c) Approaches to note taking:
   • class notes can be made by learners as you go along in pauses after discussion
   • one learner is nominated as scribe for the day and takes notes to add to class copy
   • the teacher can prepare a note pack in advance so that no notes need to be made in class
   • learners could work in groups to mind-map a chosen scene, event or character-related piece

d) Supporting learners – it may be useful to provide learners with:
   • a list of literary terms
   • a list of vocabulary and phrases specific to text (idiomatic language)
   • a summary of the text
   • the film of the text
   • a list of critical works available from the school library or online
   • ideas on how to search articles on internet web sites via www.google.fr / www.google.de / www.google.es
   • a filmed recording or live performance of a play
   • an edition of the text which has a good introduction and text notes and essential vocabulary at the back

e) Suggested activities to support further learning:
   • background research on author/historical background/city or country. This can be used to support and enhance the study of the text but will not be an expectation for inclusion in the essay
   • sentences for translation – each act/chapter etc.
• learners produce presentations of themes
• translations of character descriptions
• adjectives to sort for each character
• gap filling activities
• group discussion with flip chart and a plenary to pool ideas
• quizzes: Who said this? / Complete the quote / Plot Quiz etc.

f) Discuss essay writing with learners (see section on essay writing in this guidance):
• how to write an introduction
• how to go about planning an essay
• how to produce perfect paragraphs

g) Discuss marking and feedback with learners:
• using positive feedback and constructive criticism
• pointers for improvement, assessment for learning
• use sample essays as examples of good practice
• the value of peer assessment

2.5 Approaches to studying a film

If your centre has a Media Studies department, an introductory talk by a media studies colleague would be an ideal way of starting the study of film with your learners. An explanation of basic cinematic techniques will help learners to develop an understanding of the devices used to tell a story through the medium of film.

As an introduction to film in the language of study learners could view as a class a series of short, carefully chosen extracts from the film (e.g. the opening sequence ideally 3-5 minutes, depending on the film). The following are suggestions of activities that could be used in the classroom.

• use a “viewing grid” (see Appendix 3)
• when the grid has been completed learners can give their individual responses and views in straightforward language. Comments can be gathered as a group to produce a class “mind map” to give an overview of different views
• a follow-up class discussion
• a written response – set a question to encourage a short response in a structured way (introduction, development and conclusion) of about 100-150 words with a sharp focus on the extract studied
• seeing only a short extract will help learners to avoid irrelevancy

As learners gain confidence and acquire relevant terms and vocabulary they will then be able to move on to a ‘motivated’ critical and analytical response.
A ‘motivated’ critical and analytical response

Learners are being asked to think about their role as spectators. Learners ask questions of a film extract (including work they have studied themselves) because they want to know the answers:

- How does this sequence create suspense?
- How does the sequence move me emotionally?
- Why do I identify strongly with a particular character?
- Why do I find the message(s) contained in the extract so powerful?

A written critical and analytical response

A written critical and analytical response is a detailed study of one or more aspects of a short extract of a film. The questions to be asked focus on how the film communicates and the impact it has on the viewer. Beyond this, the purpose is to understand better the interaction between film and spectator.

A critical and analytical response is more than a commentary. It is not enough to identify and describe (even in formal/technical terms) the plot and storyline in a short extract (3-5 minutes or so).

Aspects to consider

Learners consider how the strategies used by the film maker impact on the spectator. Learners can start work on an extract by asking themselves:

- What is happening to me as I watch this?
- Why?
- Which cinematic features are responsible for this response?
- How do I relate to a particular character? Why?

This will provoke a more motivating, a more genuine enquiry. The learner-as-spectator should be able to explain why the film extract affects them as it does. This latter approach may encourage a more personal voice and lead to greater critical self-reflection. These are both qualities to be encouraged and developed.

When we ask for personal responses, there cannot be a right or wrong answer in the traditional sense. We will consider what makes a good answer in the following section.
2.6 Developing the skills to write a critical and analytical essay

The essay is a critical and analytical response to the question set about the film or literary work. It must always be focused on answering one or more specific points related to the question set in a way that relies on a disciplined close analysis of selected features.

Questions may include phrases such as:

Croyez-vous que... À votre avis... Donnez vos raisons... / Was denkst du über...? Gib deine Gründe... Gib Beispiele... / Da tus razones..., Justifica tus opiniones...

The writing is ‘personal’ in that the learner is seeking answers to questions the film or literary work has prompted him/her to ask.

What makes a “good” answer?

A good answer finds a balance between generalising about the “audience” response to a film/text, and identifying aspects of response that are particular to the learner. Where there is a variation between what appears to be the intended audience response and the learner’s actual response, this needs to be accounted for and may be the very heart of the discussion.

A well-argued, balanced answer includes knowledge of the film, consideration of the themes, judgement within a structured argument, depending on the question set:

- A ‘personal response’ is encouraged – the writing should be disciplined, focussing on the question as set. A simple description based on a description of the film/text, and its plot and characters should be avoided.

- A good answer will select events, actions or behaviour to support or justify the learner’s views or draw conclusions related to the question set.

- The learner should focus on the question that he/she is trying to answer. A good way of doing this is for the learner to keep asking him/herself: am I still focusing on the question or am I just writing down everything I know about the text/film?

The end product, the essay, must always be focused on answering one or more specific points related to the question set in a way that relies on a disciplined close analysis of selected features. The writing is ‘personal’ in that the learner is seeking answers to questions the film/text has prompted him/her to ask.
Planning an essay

A good essay is carefully planned using key question words as a framework:

a) For context:

   Wer? Wann? Wo? Wie? Wie viele?
   ¿Quién? ¿Cuándo? ¿Dónde? ¿Cómo? ¿Cuánto?

b) For a critical and analytical response:

   Pourquoi? Quoi? A quel point? Dans quelle mesure? De quelle façon?
   Warum? Wieso? Aus welchem Grund?
   ¿Por qué? ¿Hasta qué punto? ¿De qué manera?

c) For evaluation:

   Quelles sont les conséquences? Quels sont les effets?
   Was sind die Folgen? Was sind die Auswirkungen?
   ¿Qué efectos se producen? ¿Qué repercusiones hay?
The introduction

The introduction should be relevant to the question set. A long preamble giving information about the film or text such as cast, director, date of release and so on is not necessary and wastes time.

Learners should also avoid the temptation to use a pre-learnt paragraph such as:

"C'est une question fort épineuse donc il m'est vraiment difficile de savoir par où commencer à répondre à cette question, mais j'essaierai de mon mieux à écrire une réponse convenable à ce titre" (33 words)

"Voy a contestar esta pregunta sobre esta película/ este libro que me gusta mucho e intentaré dar mis propias ideas sobre el éxito del auto / del director en conseguir lo que pretendía" (35 words)

"Diese Frage ist schwer zu beantworten, aber ich werde versuchen, meine Meinung zu dem Thema zu geben und auch einige Beispiele anzuführen, die relevant sind und meine Meinung rechtfertigen" (29 words)

This type of introduction does not enhance the quality of the essay and it wastes words.

Structuring the essay

Learners could use the following ideas, if relevant to the question set, to help them structure their essay:

- Consider the main events of the film/text, i.e. the plot: is it linear? Is it chronological? Does it move around in time? Are there flashback sequences and why?

- Identify the characters relevant to the question. Which character changes most during the plot? Who or what causes the change in the character? Consider key events which illustrate this. Look at relationships between characters and what happens to them.

- Is it a first-person narrative? Is your protagonist (main character) narrating the film/text, or is he/she an observer of the events? Is the narrator reliable or unreliable?

- Establish the film/text's main themes. The theme is the main idea of the film/text, there can be a number of themes. Which theme is the most important for this question? Has the question indicated a particular theme to analyse?

- Think about the film/text, in a wider context. What does the theme say about the world, human nature, human experience or human values? What was the director/author trying to convey? How successful has he/she been in your opinion in conveying that message?
• Look at the words/listen to the dialogue. What imagery does the author use? This is easy to identify if you take notes throughout reading the text or watching the film since it can be a chapter or whole scene or just a few words or dialogue. In what places does the author/director evoke your senses: touch, taste, smell, sight and hearing?

• Identify symbolism in the film/text. Symbolism means the use of objects, people or elements of the story to represent something else.

• Do any of the characters symbolise something? Is the setting symbolic? Symbolism is easier to spot the second time you watch a film or read a text, when you are already aware of the general events of the story and can focus on the underlying meaning.

• Consider the style and tone of the language of the film/text. Is it formal or informal? Does the narrator or a specific character make you laugh or feel sad? Does any scene make you react angrily or in solidarity? The ways in which scenes and chapters are structured can have an effect on how you respond to the film/text.

• Short, apt quotations can be used to illustrate a point but lengthy quotes are not necessary and often detract from the point being made. An essay should not be built around pre-learnt quotations which, if not used appropriately may detract from the quality of the essay. If quotations are used, they must be correct.

The above ideas will help learners to structure the main body of the essay in a clear and concise way. The two key words here are clarity and concision.

The conclusion

The concluding paragraph of the essay should be short, phrases such as:

"En conclusion...", "Pour conclure..." or "En bref...
"Zusammenfassend kann man sagen", "um meine Ideen zusammen zu fassen"
"En conclusión"... or "En resumen..."

These should lead to a brief summing up of your main points about the question set. No new material or ideas should be introduced at this final point. To do so suggests bad planning and muddled thinking on the part of the learner!

Some points of grammar to learn and use in essay writing – these suggestions are NOT exhaustive.
How to say “deals with” in French:

The verb s'agir de is impersonal and uses the pronoun il:
- Il s'agit dans ce film de la vie des jeunes de la banlieue.
- Dans cette œuvre il s'agit des problèmes d'adolescence.
- De quoi s'agit-il dans ce livre/film ? Il s'agit de la guerre.

Nouns ending in "-ment" are almost always masculine:
- Le logement, le changement, le jugement... [exception: la jument].

Nouns ending in "-tion" or in "-sion" are almost always feminine:
- la nation, l'introduction, la conclusion, la passion (but: le lion).

Le problème is MASCULINE: remember:
- Tous les problèmes sont masculins, toutes les solutions sont féminines.

Il est and c'est:
- Il est intéressant de faire ce travail.
- Ce travail est intéressant à faire.
- C'est intéressant à faire.

"Ça" is fine for conversational use, but in an essay should be written as "cela".
"Penser à" and "penser de".
- à to think about
  - Réda pensait au voyage difficile qu'il devait faire. (à → y : Il y pensait.)
  - À quoi pensez-vous ? Je pense à la pièce que j'ai vue hier soir.
  - Il ne pense jamais à sa mère.
- de for an opinion:
  - Que pensez-vous de ce film ? (de → en : Qu'en pensez-vous ?)
  - Il m'a demandé ce que je pensais de son idée.

Most essays about films or texts will be written in the historic present.
- 3rd person present tense forms both singular and plural must be thoroughly familiar and used accurately, especially irregular verbs.

Other tenses will be used as appropriate: for example, the pluperfect:
- Quand Saïd est arrivé chez Vinz, celui-là avait déjà volé le flingue.

The present participle (parlant, finissant, voyant etc.):
- En sortant de son appartement, Meursault a vu Raymond.
D’une manière not “dans une...”:
• Mustapha a répondu d’une manière curieuse.
• Ismène est entrée d’une façon dramatique.

Où after expressions of time: (not quand):
• Le jour où Werner arrive chez l’oncle et la nièce.
• La famille a dû quitter leur appartement l’année où la guerre a éclaté.

Malgré et bien que
Malgré is a preposition. It introduces a noun or a pronoun:
• Malgré le mauvais temps l’avion a atterri.
• Malgré ses efforts il n’a pas réussi.
Bien que is a conjunction. After bien que, the present subjunctive must be used:
• Bien que Lou soit très jeune, elle est intellectuellement précoce.

Peut-être is an adverb indicating a possibility. There are two ways of using this:
Inverting the verb
• Peut-être viendra-t-elle demain.
• Peut-être aurons-nous de la neige or Adding que:
• Peut-être qu’elle viendra demain.
• Peut-être que nous aurons de la neige.
b) German

How to say “deals with” in German:

- Es handelt sich in diesem Film um das Erwachsenwerden. Dieses Buch handelt vom Erwachsenwerden. Es geht in diesem Film um das Erwachsenwerden.
- In diesem Buch handelt es sich um / geht es um die Probleme der jungen Leute.
- Von was handelt der Film? Er handelt von der Wiedervereinigung.
- Um was geht es / Um was handelt es sich in dem Film? Es geht um / es handelt sich um die Wiedervereinigung.

Nouns ending in ”...-heit, -keit, -ung” are almost always feminine:
- Die Einheit, die Wirklichkeit, die Übersetzung.

Nouns ending in ”...-tion” ”...-sion” are almost always feminine:
- Die Nation, die Ration, die Version.

”Denken an” und ”denken über” oder ”halten von”

- über for an opinion:
  Wie denkst du über diesen Film? (Was hältst du von diesem Film?)
  Er hat mich gefragt, wie ich über diesen Film denke.
  Er hat mich gefragt, was ich von diesem Film halte.

- An to think about:
  Er denkt an seine Vergangenheit als DDR Bürger.
  An was denkt du? Ich denke an die Prüfung, die ich morgen machen muss.
  Er denkt nicht gerne an seine Arbeit.

One of the most common mistakes when writing essays is word order. Learners need to keep in mind that:

- In German main clauses the verb is the second idea (not the second word) e.g. Meine Freunde und ich essen gerne in der neuen Kantine.
  Ich finde diesen Film sehr interessant.
  Ich habe dieses Buch nicht so gerne gelesen. (Past participle goes to the end.)

- In German subordinate clauses the verb goes to the end. Subordinate clauses are introduced by various conjunctions e.g. weil, wenn, ob, wie, obwohl, dass or by relative pronouns: der, die, das.
  e.g. Ich habe dieses Buch nicht so gerne gelesen, weil das Thema nicht interessant ist.

- When a main clause is preceded by a subordinate clause (or by anything else except und / aber / doch), its subject and verb are inverted.
  e.g. Wenn ich am Wochenende ausgehe, gebe ich viel Geld aus.
  Manchmal gehe ich einkaufen.
  Ich denke man sollte sich gut auf die Prüfung vorbereiten, deshalb arbeite ich am Wochenende nicht mehr.
  An Ostern fahre ich in Urlaub.
How to say “deals with” in Spanish:

Either en el libro se trata de or este libro trata de...

One of the most persistent errors made by Spanish learners is the use of problema and problemas. While the general rule is that Spanish nouns ending in -a are almost universally feminine, some common nouns ending in -a are masculine. For example, problema, mapa, cometa are masculine and adjectives must agree with them. For example, “los problemas serios que vemos en esta película son... El problema con el protagonista es que es totalmente egocéntrico”.

The above must not be confused with a feminine noun beginning with a or ha which takes the masculine article in the singular but remains feminine and reverts to the feminine article in the plural. For example, compare “el agua estaba muy fría” with “las aguas de ese lago siempre son frías”.

The translation of the word people causes problems. The common way of doing this in Spanish is to use “la gente”, which MUST always take a singular verb. Thus, “la gente en el molino no es nada simpática”. (We will not go into the use of las gentes here).

Use of afectar. Learners must not use efectar for afectar, nor afectos when they mean efectos. Thus, “el ambiente en el molino le afectó a Ofelia” and “la violencia del Capitán Vidal tuvo muchos efectos nefastos” are correct.

Learners should not confuse peligro and peligros (danger/s) with the adjective/noun peligroso / peligrosos.

Learners must avoid the temptation to make up words such as the common preventir, preventer instead of impedir.

The following are often confused: derecho / derecha / razón. Learners should understand the correct usage of these to translate “right” in the following sentence: “Los historiadores de hoy tienen razón al decir que en la España de Franco las mujeres de derechas tenían pocos derechos”.

The auxiliary used with a continuous tense is estar not ser. Thus, “los dos hombres estaban (NEVER eran) cazando cuando fueron capturados por los soldados”.

Learners must pay attention to the use of ser and estar with the past participle. Briefly, ser emphasises the action and estar the state resulting from the action. Learners should compare these two sentences: “los cazadores fueron asesinados (were killed) por el Capitán Vidal” and “el padre se dio cuenta en seguida de que su hijo estaba muerto (was dead)”. Learners should practise the difference between la muerte, muerto / muerta / muertos / muertas and matar / matado (asesinado).

Learners should know the difference between the verbs consumir and consumar as well as pay attention to the present subjunctive of both.

Gustar is a constant source of difficulty for Spanish learners and needs frequent practice.
The Independent Research Project (IRP) forms part of Component 1, the speaking component, which is worth a total of 60 marks (30% of qualification) of which 40 marks are awarded for the presentation and discussion.

The candidate is not allowed any preparation time before delivering his or her presentation but is allowed to bring into the examination room to consult if needed the IRP pro-forma, containing a list of up to ten key points written in English (not in the language of study). The candidate is required to give a two minute presentation on his or her research project. The visiting examiner will not interrupt this presentation. The presentation is followed by a discussion of 9-10 minutes in the language of study on the content of the research project.

The speaking assessment will be conducted at centres by a visiting examiner appointed by WJEC. The examiner will conduct and mark the assessment which will be digitally recorded.

The independent research project is important because:

a) It allows candidates to choose any aspect of personal interest relating to the communities or countries where the language of study is spoken. It does not have to be a literary work or film, but can be any subject of personal interest to the learner. It must, however, be a project which has enough content to sustain both a two minute presentation and an unrehearsed and unprepared discussion lasting 9-10 minutes.

b) All candidates in a centre are expected to choose a subject that is personal to them and therefore different from other candidates in the same centre. However if more than one candidate in the same centre happens to choose the same subject, the approach and presentation by each individual candidate must be different in order to produce a unique piece of work.

c) As candidates are required to undertake individual research, the IRP is the individual's work but the teacher has a guidance role to play (see section on IRP and the teacher's role blow).

d) Candidates may not choose any text or film on the prescribed list, which they are studying for the written assessment in Component 3.

e) The project should encourage learners to develop their individual knowledge, appreciation, enthusiasm and understanding of the subject chosen.

f) Learners are required to develop research skills in the language of study – including identifying lines of enquiry and conducting individual research. Learners will start by identifying a key question or subject of interest to them.

g) Learners are required to select information in the language of study from a range of... authentic sources. These may well include written materials such as the press, as well as audio and visual materials such as radio, TV and film. Learners are required to employ the use of the internet.

h) Once learners have selected the research material they should analyse and summarise their research findings to exemplify, illustrate and explain their research subject.

i) Learners are required to demonstrate their research skills in the speaking assessment and be ready to elaborate on key points of interest as they arise throughout the speaking presentation and ensuing discussion.

j) During the undertaking of the research project learners will be able to develop their capacity for critical and analytical thinking. The research process will enable learners to acquire the appropriate vocabulary to allow them to present and discuss the project in the language of study.

The Independent Research project and the teacher’s role

The role of the teacher is to guide the learners when undertaking the Independent Research Project (IRP).

a) The teacher should share with learners the skills required when undertaking the IRP.

b) The teacher should ensure in general terms that their learners have the necessary language tools to make good quality speaking presentations. This includes presenting ideas, illustrating them, using suitable language to persuade or sell ideas and to summarise findings. Learners also need to be able to defend and explain ideas in a firm but polite fashion.

c) Only the learner will undertake the work for the IRP, no other party is allowed to undertake the work on the learner’s behalf.

d) The teacher may advise a learner on the suitability of the subject for the IRP (and if in doubt consult the Subject Officer at WJEC).

e) The teacher may give general advice, possibly on a whole group or class level, on what is meant by research. He/she may indicate possible general sources of information, show that sources need to be acknowledged, and that findings must be supported by evidence. The teacher may indicate that the results of research need to be evaluated and summarised.

f) The Teacher can assist the candidate with the completion of the IRP pro-forma.
Administration

During preparation for the speaking assessment candidates must complete the Independent Research Project pro-forma providing the title of their research project and outlining up to 10 key points in English. The form can be downloaded from the subject page on the WJEC Eduqas website. The purpose of the pro-forma is to provide the visiting examiner with some prior information about the candidate's chosen subject for the IRP. The pro-forma will be sent by the centre to the visiting examiner at least three weeks before the beginning of the assessment period in April.

In order to ensure that the pro-forma is sufficiently informative for the visiting examiner, the candidate's teacher may assist with its completion. The pro-forma itself will not be assessed. The candidate may bring a copy of the pro-forma to the speaking assessment that he/she can use as a prompt if necessary for the presentation and discussion. The pro-forma is an aid to memory only and will not provide linguistic support of any sort in the language of study.

For the Independent Research Project (IRP) learners may choose a topic linked to one of the themes or sub-themes listed in the specification. However, the IRP also gives learners the opportunity to study an area or theme not otherwise covered by the specification. Learners must, however, ensure that the topic they have chosen relates to the country or countries where the language of study is spoken.

N.B. Please remember that candidates are not permitted to choose any text or film on the prescribed list for the IRP, which they are studying for the written assessment in Component 3.

2.8 Guidance on preparing schemes of work

The scheme of work

Every centre will have a policy on how a scheme of work should look. In general schemes of work are linked to subject development plans and departmental or subject self-evaluation documents. These should reflect the priorities and areas for improvement identified in them. A scheme of work, however, concentrates on the actual teaching and learning and the delivery of the prescribed content. The following offers an approach for teachers facing the prospect of writing a scheme of work for the first time or which experienced practitioners may find useful as a check-list.

The scheme of work is a working document for the teachers who are actually delivering an A level modern foreign language in the classroom. Senior management might prescribe some of the headings, the detail and the actual layout of the document but it is the teachers themselves who provide the actual content.

A scheme of work is not in itself a file of lesson plans or a thick folder of teaching and learning materials (although it might be useful to provide these as appendices) but rather a planning document. It will set out what is to be taught during each half term and the associated assessments that will take place in line with the centre's policy. It is a living document that is subject to continual revision and updating; an electronically stored master document can be easily revised and updated.

The scheme of work outlines the concepts, information and skills the specification is designed to test and those the learner must acquire. Concepts can, for example, be grammatical or literary ones. The information can be the content of the set works but also details such as vocabulary and detailed morphology. The skills include not only the standard skills of listening, speaking, reading and writing and sub-skills within the above main language skills, but also analytical and literary ones.

A scheme of work details what work is to be completed against a time-line. Planning of the correct timing is an essential requirement as the specification must be completed before the dates of the relevant examination. Planning must take into account holidays, half terms, and any other non-teaching days during the academic year. It should allow for the requirements of internal assessments, including mock examinations.

The scheme of work will outline both teaching activities (together with the appropriate methodology) and learning activities, including those that the students are expected to undertake by themselves as homework or part of supported self-study.

The scheme of work sets out how and when learners’ progress is to be assessed as well as what is to be specifically assessed. The scheme of work will also set out how differentiated tasks will be used to meet the needs of learners of various abilities and how more able learners will be stretched.

It is helpful to provide an overview sheet at the beginning of the scheme of work. This is the strategic summary of what needs to be achieved in the time available. It also allows any reader (supply teacher, senior manager, inspector etc.) to see where the learners should be; what they have covered and what they will be covering next.

A scheme of work can be judged as effective if it enables another member of the teaching staff or a supply teacher to seamlessly take up the teaching of a group should a colleague be absent or unavailable.
Teaching A-level

During the two year course you will be covering the four themes and related sub-themes prescribed by the Specification. In addition learners will acquire and develop the skills required to successfully undertake the three components in the final examination. The components are:

- Component 1 – Speaking
- Component 2 – Listening, reading and translation
- Component 3 – Critical and analytical writing (film and/or literary option(s)).

Learners following the A level course are required to study one film and one literary text OR two literary texts, to be examined in Component 3.

Co-teaching AS and A level

Centres co-teaching AS and A level must ensure the following:

- The two themes and related sub-themes common to AS and A level are covered
- The one film or one literary text common to AS and A level (see the prescribed lists in the Specification) is taught
- That AS candidates are fully prepared for the three AS components examined at the end of the AS course:

  Component 1 – Speaking
  Component 2 – Listening, reading and translation
  Component 3 – Critical response in writing (film or literary option).

As explained above each centre will have its own approach to schemes of work. However teachers may find the following mapping grid useful as a starting point when producing a scheme of work for the new specification. This grid is intended as a guide only.

3. Use of the internet and related technologies

The internet has become an essential tool for both teachers and learners. Young people, in particular, find its use motivating and useful.

The Department for Education subject requirement document for modern foreign languages states:

"at both AS and A level, students must use authentic spoken and written sources from a variety of different contexts and genres, including online media, as stimulus material for the study of the themes and, concurrently, for language development".

Teachers will want to ensure that learners are able to use online media to good effect to complement and enhance language study.

3.1 Finding and using websites

This guidance gives a list of potentially useful web sites for the teaching of French, German and Spanish. These are listed in the Appendices.

There are dedicated educational resources sites such as WJEC Eduqas which provide resources to help teachers prepare learners taking modern foreign language qualifications in French, German or Spanish.

As far as languages are concerned, it is important to realise that Google, for example, has different versions for different geographical areas and languages. ‘Google.com’ is not the same as ‘google.co.uk’ and the results of searches could be different. Searching in “google.fr”, “google.de” or “google.es” will give results in the foreign language.

It is likely that you will have to do more than ‘cut and paste’ any materials copied from the internet into your word processor. Any ‘authentic material’ might well have to be edited. It might be too long. The language might need to be simplified. Errors in the original might well have to be corrected and offensive or inappropriate material eliminated.
3.2 Web sites with specific functions

Grammar

By typing in a grammatical search term e.g. ‘preterite in Spanish’ or ‘prepositions taking the accusative case in German’ or ‘French verbs with être as the auxiliary’ you are likely to find many ready-made explanations in English (and or the foreign language, using the correct search term) and also exercises on the internet. Such sites, however, do vary in quality, as do the exercises. Some universities and colleges make documents such as these, originally produced for their own students, available on the web.

Literature and Film

There are sites and apps, such as IMDb that are dedicated to films. On sites such as these you can find the synopses of films, details about the actors, photos of the production as well as reviews and evaluations.

It is possible, via the internet, to look at the catalogues of publishers and booksellers and search them for specific texts; you might find the text title initially via a normal search. These catalogues are likely to contain a short synopsis as well as a possible evaluation of the texts. Some online booksellers have dedicated sites for France, Spain and Germany etc. If you are searching for a specific text in the foreign language you are more likely to find it on the site dedicated to the country. As well as printed texts it is often possible to find online electronic versions of the same texts. These are often cheaper than the printed version, especially when postage is taken into consideration. E-texts can then be read online, on a computer, a tablet or smartphone as well as on a dedicated e-reader.

Newspapers and magazines

Access to some online newspapers is free e.g. http://www.20minutes.fr/. Others will allow you to read the beginning of an article but invite you to subscribe to read the remainder. The usual cost can be 1 Euro a day after perhaps a free month. For French, “Le Parisien”, “La voix du Nord”, “Ouest-France” are useful (see the language specific web site pages in the appendices). They all allow the reader to search within their archives for articles on specific topics e.g. immigration, the environment, social problems. The electronic versions of these and similar newspapers are available via apps on smartphones and tablets.

It is also possible to subscribe to online versions of magazines that can normally be bought in kiosks. They are available online and sometimes cost less than the printed version. They are certainly cheaper than a printed subscription for magazines sent via post.
Radio

An app such as “Tuneln Radio” allows you to tune into (and record) radio programmes from around the world on your smartphone and tablet. It is possible, therefore to listen to France Info, Deutsche Welle or Cadena Ser whenever they are broadcasting.

Invariably such stations have corresponding websites with written articles that often match what has been transmitted. Occasionally there might be a transcript. Again, you are likely to be able to search both the archive of sound recordings and articles produced by the station.

Blogs: Many radio and TV stations produce blogs, the contents of which could well be of interest to teachers and language learners e.g. theatre, show business, sport, politics, social issues.

Audio blogs in various languages on a very wide range of topics are also available via iTunes.

Television

Although the usual way of seeing TV programmes in a foreign language is via satellite broadcasting, it is possible to access some foreign channels via the Internet. For example BMTV (French), the TV news channel is freely available via the internet and available via an app on smartphones and tablets. Before viewing live broadcasts, however, you may be expected to watch an advertisement. Other TV channels are available via the internet.

Videoconferencing

Videoconferencing makes it relatively easy to talk to an exchange partner or person of interest in the foreign language via apps such as Skype or Facetime (Apple), usually free of charge. Videoconferencing allows not only speech but an exchange of visual information and can be supplemented by email and the sending of attachments containing text, presentations, photos and videos.

The easiest way of sending authentic materials, these days, is via attachments and email. It is possible to scan documents and save them as pdf files that can then be sent to contacts as email attachments. An even easier, instant way is to take a photograph of the page on your smartphone and send the photo as an attachment to an email.
Wikipedia

This is a free website, maintained by public subscription, available in many languages dedicated to the spreading of knowledge and information. It is useful if you want a general introduction to a topic but also if you want information about an author, place or politician. Articles do vary in quality and care needs to be taken, sometimes, with the accuracy of the information given. Articles are moderated and this moderation indicates if any extra work is required. One useful feature is that in some instances, the same articles are available in various languages. This might be useful for comparison purposes.

Translation tools

Learners quickly become aware of tools such as ‘Google Translate or ‘iTranslate’ that instantly translate passages from one language to another. Teachers will no doubt be aware that such mechanical translation can be incomplete, wrong or misleading. Mechanical translation can be of use, especially in providing vocabulary of a technical nature where there is a one to one correspondence in meaning between the two languages. Very often, however, the morphology, word order or structures are not correct and it needs a specialist linguist to make the corrections or any sense of the text.

Social Media

A high proportion of UK adults subscribe to social media such as Facebook as do very many young people. The dangers of the internet are well-known and the inappropriate use of social media is well documented. Nevertheless, many of the newspapers, magazines, radio stations, TV stations and publishers have their own Instagram, Twitter and Facebook Pages and the ‘postings’ as well as the ‘comments’ could well be of interest to language learners and teachers. In addition to the caveat about appropriateness, there is another caveat - not all the comments and responses written in the foreign language are written in correct French, German or Spanish, but one of the advantages of the internet is that items can be copied, pasted into word processors, such as “Word” (Microsoft) or “Pages”(Apple) and corrected or modified.

3.3 Applications which are useful language tools.

If you have an Android or iOS (Apple) device you will be able to select either free or paying apps useful for linguists. The most obvious of these are dictionaries:

There are a number of dictionaries, for example, there are English monolingual dictionaries such as, “dictionary.com,” “Oxford Dictionary of English”, and “Advanced English Dictionary and thesaurus”.
An example of a monolingual French dictionary is ‘dictionnaire l’internaute’ (which also has short English equivalents.) There is also ‘dictionnaire littre’ and the Larousse dictionaries.

For German, examples of dictionaries are "German dictionary and translator" and, "German English dictionary". There are also monolingual German dictionaries.

For Spanish, examples of dictionaries are “offline English-Spanish Dictionary," “Spanish dictionary and thesaurus”.

Other programs exist which give the forms of verbs in different tenses. Examples are “French Verbs” and “Spanish Verbs”.

4. A guide to the Assessment Components

The A level is a linear qualification made up of three components.

4.1 A level components

Component 1 is a speaking assessment, Component 2 is a combined listening, reading and translation examination and Component 3 is a critical and analytic response in writing examination. For Component 3 learners are required to study either one film and one literary work or two literary works, taken from the list of prescribed films and literary works (see specification).

Note: If AS is not being co-taught alongside A level, teachers are free to choose any literary work(s) and/or film, as appropriate from the prescribed lists.
Component 1 - Speaking

The Speaking or ‘Non-exam assessment’ is marked out of 60 (AO1-4) and worth 30% of the total qualification.

The assessment is conducted by an external examiner appointed by the WJEC during the period designated for oral examinations (April/May). The assessment lasts 21-23 minutes (including 5 minutes preparation for the theme-based discussion).

The assessment consists of two tasks – task 1 the Independent Research Project (IRP) (see section 2.7) and task 2 a theme-based discussion card.

Task 1 - The Independent Research Project

The Independent Research Project (IRP), however, does have two parts;

a) An oral presentation by the candidate of his or her research project. This is to last two minutes. No credit will be given for any part of the presentation which falls outside of the prescribed two minutes. Once the two minutes are up the examiner will proceed to the second part of the task.

b) A discussion on the Independent Research Project. This lasts between 9 and 10 minutes.

Candidates have no official preparation time on the day appointed for the assessment as they will have previously prepared their Independent Research Project.

Candidates are not allowed to use dictionaries in any part of the assessment.

Candidates may not bring into the examination any notes written in the language of study designed to help them with either the presentation or the following discussion. They are, however, allowed to bring into the examination their ‘independent research pro-forma’ completed in English that provides the title of their project and outlines up to 10 key points. The examiner will have received a copy from the centre three weeks previously to give him/her an opportunity to prepare possible questions or lines of questioning. Candidates need to show the examiner that this is their pro-forma and refer to these notes (in English) during their presentation.

It is likely that the visiting examiner will make some reference to the 10 bullet points during the second part of the assessment and candidates will need encouragement to think of answers to and the implications of the points they themselves have indicated. In addition, candidates must be prepared to answer the examiner’s follow-up questions leading on from the presentation.
Teachers will also need to advise their candidates of the allocation of marks for each part of the task. The presentation and the following discussion are marked out of 40 (AO1-4): the presentation itself is worth 10 marks and the discussion following the presentation is worth 30 marks (see the Sample Assessment Materials booklet for the detailed breakdown). Teachers will want to ensure that candidates fully understand the mark scheme so that they understand what the examiner is looking for.

Task 2 – Theme based discussion

A discussion in the language of study based on a stimulus card comprising an image with related text on one of the sub-themes and a point for discussion, as set out in this A level specification.

Following the completion of task 1 the visiting examiner will pause the recording and the candidate will be given 5 minutes preparation time in the examination room with the examiner before commencing the theme-based discussion.

The visiting examiner will offer the candidate two stimulus cards provided by WJEC. The candidate must pick one of the cards, and he/she will then prepare the discussion point on that stimulus card during the allocated preparation time. During the preparation time the candidate may, if he/she wishes make notes in the language of study or English on a separate piece of paper, not on the card. The notes are an aid to memory and must not constitute whole sentences or a complete text. Reading out whole sentences or a complete text will have a detrimental effect on the candidate's spontaneity. The candidate will hand the notes to the visiting examiner at the end of the assessment.

At the end of the 5 minutes preparation time the visiting examiner will restart the recording and initiate the discussion lasting 5-6 minutes with the candidate. When the candidate has responded to the discussion point on the card, the visiting examiner will then ask the candidate one further question. This supplementary question will not be on the card.

At the start of the discussion, candidates must refer to information in the stimulus text, to show the visiting examiner that the material has been understood.

The candidate will be required to ask the visiting examiner at least two questions. The examiner will prompt the candidate should he/she omit to ask any questions.

The discussion cards will be based on any of the four themes studied at A level. For themes 1-3 candidates can talk about any countries or communities where the language of study is spoken. For theme 4 which is country specific, discussion will be limited to that country only.

The theme-based discussion is marked out of 20 (AO1, AO3 and AO4 - see the Sample Assessment Materials booklet for the detailed breakdown).
Teachers should make candidates aware that they will not be penalised for using any of the following skills during the speaking assessment: adjusting the message, circumlocution, self-correction or repair strategies.

Component 2 - Listening, reading and translation

This is a written examination lasting 2 hours 30 minutes and is marked out of 100 and worth 50% of the qualification.

Candidates are required to complete all the paper in the language of study.

The examination has of three sections:

Section A: Listening, comprising four questions worth a total of 30 marks. Candidates are advised to spend 45 minutes on this section.

Section B: Reading, also comprising four questions worth a total of 30 marks. Candidates are advised to spend 45 minutes on this section, of which they should spend 5 minutes reading.

Section C: Translation, comprising two tasks worth a total of 40 marks; the first a translation of an unseen passage or passages (minimum of 100 words) from English into the language of study, worth a total of 20 marks; the second task a translation of an unseen passage or passages (minimum of 100 words) from the language of study into English, worth a total of 20 marks. Candidates are advised to spend 1 hour on this section.

Candidates have to attempt all questions. There is no choice.

In addition to the question paper candidates will have a CD/mp3 recording of the listening passages upon which section A is based and a resource folder containing the reading passages upon which section B is based.

Candidates are not permitted to use a dictionary in any part of the examination.

The content of the listening, reading and translation tasks is based on the four main themes specified for A level in the language of study. Other sections of this handbook indicate possible sources of authentic material.

The listening and reading have equal weighting in this specification. There is a wide range of both listening and reading tasks from the point of view of length, register and type. They are drawn from a wide range of sources including contemporary, historical, literary fiction and non-fiction material. The marks awarded for questions have different weightings.

Candidates are required not only to answer all questions in the language of study but also face a wide variety of tasks; question types which may include true/false statements, multiple choice, questions and answers, gap-fill answers, summary/assimilation style questions and comprehension questions in the language of study.

Teachers will want to ensure that candidates have experience of a wide variety of listening and written materials and are equipped to deal with the question types above.

Marks are awarded for AO1 (listening) in section A and AO2 (reading) in section B.

The translations (section C) are for marking purposes divided into 20 sections with one mark per section. The translation from the language of study into English is marked according to AO2 and the translation from English into the language of study is marked according to AO3.

The specimen papers and mark schemes detail how marks are awarded as well as the general principles of marking. Teachers will want to ensure candidates are familiar with the requirements, the expectations and allocation of marks.

Component 3 - Critical and analytical response in writing

This is a written examination lasting 2 hours and is marked out of 40 and worth 20% of the qualification.

This is a ‘closed book’ examination (texts may not be used in any part of the assessment) and the use of dictionaries is not permitted. Candidates are required to respond in the language of study, writing their answers in a separate answer booklet.

Candidates will have studied one literary work and either an additional literary work or a film from the prescribed lists in the specification. Candidates answer one question on each of the two works studied.

Candidates will produce two critical and analytical written responses of approximately 300 words each. Candidates have a choice of two questions for each task. Each task is worth 20 marks, with 10 marks awarded according to AO3 and 10 marks awarded according to AO4.

Teachers will want to ensure that learners are able to write critically and analytically about a film or a literary work in the language of study. Learners are expected to appreciate the importance of the form, style and language, for example, in the depiction of ambiance in the chosen film or literary work.
Candidates need to be encouraged to look at relevant internet sites as well as magazines, newspapers and books in order to build up their own portfolio of personalised subject related material which will form the basis of their own A level presentation and discussion.

A wealth of information is available from the Internet. Virtually all the print and electronic media have their own websites which are updated on a daily basis – even those of weekly or fortnightly magazines.
